He afterward enlisted in the United States service.

Alvin F. Smith of this city says he can tell a better story than appeared in Monday's paper regarding the big snow storm during the last of May, 1894. He was a young man then residing in Roxbury. He says that the storm began one Saturday night and continued all night. The snow lay to a depth of a foot and a half to two feet, while it had drifted on a level of the stone walls and packed hard. He was walking over one of these places when he heard bleating right under his feet. He dug down into the snow and found a sheep, then another and another, until he uncovered in all about 25. The animals had taken shelter next to the stone wall and were completely covered up.
